I'm just a geek and a goober, and a pretty damn good one too, at that. Just another WordPress.com site Top 3 Tips to Reducing Frugal Family Stress "When the chips are down, I'm not sure which parent will back up the other." - Our Lord and Savior There are many times when my husband and I truly need to be there for our children and for each other, but it doesn't always seem possible. I have learnt that there are ways to reduce family stress in your home. By following these three simple tips you can reduce family stress. 1. Allow time to be together. Studies show that spending time with your children will improve their academic performance, if your time isn't being taken up with work or other activities, and if you have a structured routine for them. For example, early in the morning before work, have breakfast as a family and eat slowly. This time is quality time spent together, bonding, building memories, and preparing you for the day ahead. Even if you are only able to do this once a week, make time to do it. If you can't do this, at least schedule it in your calendar. 2. Keep communication channels open. Send emails. Send text messages. Phone your children often. Your children will want to show you how they've been doing. You will be able to reassure them
