Washington — The Obama administration's decision to send $55 million to Mexico has prompted a retaliatory threat from the president of a Mexican state, which called on Monday for its congress to cut off U.S. aid for the second year in a row. The Obama administration has refused to say whether the money will go for drug war weapons or other purposes, or how much of it was actually transferred. On Friday, Treasury Secretary Jack Lew announced the transfer of $55 million in U.S. aid to Mexico — the first transfer since the U.S. and Mexico agreed to new measures to stem the flow of weapons north into Mexico. Get Breaking News Delivered to Your Inbox Lew said the money will help "improve Mexico's ability to fight organized crime" and help it deploy more agents to the border with Guatemala. Mexican President Enrique Pena Nieto said Tuesday on his Facebook page that the state of Michoacan — where a drug cartel led by the Zetas has been waging a bloody war for control — will cut off aid to the U.S. if the money is used for anything other than the drug war. A banner posted by Michoacan state's governor reads "Mexico does not sell weapons to the U.S." and says, "we are going to start cutting off aid if the money is used for anything other than the war on the Zetas." AP "The federal government must not fail to understand that its lack of response to the crisis has angered Mexicans deeply," Michoacan Governor Fausto Vallejo posted on his Facebook page. "If the U.S. government intends to continue to use our resources to support violence, we will have to take the necessary measures to respond." The U.S. government has ended its four-year freeze on U.S. aid to Mexico, but it has not been clear where the money would go. Mr. Obama criticized the use of the Mexican military to fight criminal gangs during a speech in Baja California c6a93da74d
